One of the beautiful things you like about India:

"I am an Indian", a simple introduction with endless emotion lasting forever where ever I go...

Every inch of this land is filled with the sweetness of love, happiness, Patriotism, Peace, equality, freedom and kindness. With people of pure hearts, my country is indistinguishable from Paradise.

If I have to say one of the beautiful things I like about my country, then that would be the extraordinary India culture.

India is the land where we believe parents, teachers and guests as gods, every creature around us is celebrated and every refinement is welcomed. Just the number of joint families here can describe the importance of unity which we are thought taught since our childhood.

It is true that we have been invaded by many but we have always accepted the best in any philosophy and welcomed the custom that can make us better as a person.

The festivities and celebrations are world known. We celebrate others happiness, share each others joys and sorrows. We have so many languages, religions, beliefs, food items and attires yet remain together.

celebrating our diversity. We taught the world
Peace and patience.

India is the mother land of knowledge which had great mathematicians, architects, scientists, artists right from the time when the rest of the world was covered by the darkness of hunger and lack of wisdom.

Ayurveda, which is said to be the use of mother nature to heal the growing human diseases is said to be better than any other system of treatment as it "heals from within". Yoga originated in India is said to be a great Indian art of controlling our body and soul.

India isn't just Taj Mahal, many more monuments built very long ago are beyond our imaginations. Can you imagine how the very heavy rock carved temples were built thousands of years ago with no machines? Or how the ancient astrologists could figure out not only the existence and structure but also the movements of planets and stars millions of light years away without any telescopes? So, India wasn't just the land of rope tricks or animal plays. It's the land of prosperity.

People say India is still developing but it is also true that we are developing. We aspire to get back the ancient richness and wisdom of India. I am pretty sure we can do it without losing our culture

I am proud of my country and I want to make it proud of me.

JAI HIND!
